The scripting language of AutoCAD is ObjectARX. ObjectARX is an interpreted language that is fully object-oriented and multi-threaded. It allows the creation of visual automation solutions, much like those found in Microsoft Excel, Paint Shop Pro, etc. ObjectARX Scripts are most commonly used for creating macros and personalizing the user interface. Macro can be used to automate repetitive tasks, improve usability, provide functionality that is not in the application, add functionality to an application or provide functionality that is not available in the application. To be able to perform the tasks specified in the macros, the user must run a script that is written in ObjectARX. In AutoCAD 2013, Scriptable Application Markup Language (ScriptAML) is used to document all the available ObjectARX scripts and macros. Over 10,000,000 users use ObjectARX. History According to Autodesk, ObjectARX was initially developed in 1995 in order to reduce development time for the next version of AutoCAD, which would later become AutoCAD 2002. ObjectARX was first created by Autodesk as a programming language for controlling the user interface. The ObjectARX UI Control Framework (UICF) was first released with AutoCAD R14. Prior to ObjectARX, AutoCAD had relied on Windows API to handle UI functionality. In 1997, an ObjectARX development team at Autodesk formed a partnership with the Software Group of the Computer Software Industry Association (CSIA). The partnership resulted in the release of the ObjectARX API and a programming development kit (PDK) that allowed applications to be created for AutoCAD. In 1999, the public beta of the ObjectARX PDK was released. In 2000, Autodesk acquired a majority stake in the company that developed ObjectARX. It was then decided to change the company name to ObjectARX, Inc. to reflect Autodesk's ownership of the product. In 2007, Autodesk sold all of its stake in ObjectARX to 4D Global, Inc. In August 2012, 4D Global announced a major change in the leadership of ObjectARX by appointing Michael Garcia as the President of ObjectARX and Michael Jones as Chief Operating Officer. In October 2013, 3DV Software Inc. purchased a majority stake in 4D Global, Inc. (ObjectARX)

The relationship between fertility and socio-economic status is investigated using data on births in Paris for the period 1968-1985. The analysis confirms the existence of a strong inverse relation between fertility and socio-economic status. The theoretical implications of the results are briefly discussed. The fertility patterns of poor and rich women are also compared. Since there are great differences between both groups, it is proposed to adopt a multi-class analysis. Using a model with a different number of classes of rich and poor women, and an assumption of the same fertility pattern between the classes, the relative position of poor women can be investigated.Photographer Inez & Vinoodh take a walk in the ghetto of the city Canadian photographer Inez & Vinoodh are one of those couples that make you feel like home. Between their love for dressing like it's still the 80s and their beautiful Instagram photos, Inez & Vinoodh are a duo that you have to follow. Today, they shared a photo of themselves on a "walk in the ghetto" in the city of Boston. There is a real dichotomy in this couple. Even their personal style is very different. While Inez sticks to her 80s fashion, Vinoodh, on the other hand, always looks perfect and very chic. And there they are, walking along in black jackets, caps and black leggings, both dressed as if they were from the same era. But somehow, despite all the different styles, they manage to look very charming. If you want to follow them on Instagram, here's the link to their account. You can see more of their photos in the gallery.
