Diffuse large B-cell lymphoma with a large pleomorphic giant cell component. A 75-year-old woman presented with an asymptomatic right pleural effusion, ascites, and lymphadenopathy. Cytologic examination of the pleural fluid showed a large, effusive, low-grade malignant neoplasm composed of admixed lymphoid cells and large polygonal neoplastic cells with vesicular nuclei, prominent nucleoli, abundant cytoplasm, and sometimes multinucleation. The polygonal cells were admixed with tumor cells and occasional rhabdoid cells and large multinucleated giant cells. The diagnosis was initially given as malignant giant cell tumor (MGC) of the lung. In addition, immunophenotypic analysis demonstrated a CD45/CD20+/CD45RO-/surface and cytoplasmic CD38+ large B-cell

03 Mar 2010 03:51:38 +0000 Test Playtest of the DWARF MARKET, a spiritual successor to the Legend al Elden Ring, has begun. The lore-creation team is currently hard at work writing and creating content. To a game? Not so much! Several months of testing will be needed by our Playtest to determine whether the game is playable, or whether it needs significant changes before the developers can bring the game to the development stage. The first of the two tests is scheduled from April 25 to May 10, 2010. In the process of testing the following aspects will be studied:

- Story progression.
- Any issues with the visual quality of the game.
- Observing the reaction of the players to the content, encounter systems, action, and the overall game flow of the game.
- Determining how much resource (manpower, stamina, equipment, and the like) to consume by both players and non-player characters.
- The degree of familiarity of the players to the setting of the lore.

Presence of membrane-bound pro-urokinase precursors in human neutrophils. Using a highly specific anti-hugin (urokinase-type plasminogen activator) antibody, we have identified cellular pro-urokinase precursors (p80 and p90) in human neutrophils. These cellular pro-urokinase precursors were specifically recognized by polyclonal anti-hugin antibody, and the apparent molecular mass was 70-80 kDa. In addition, we also showed that this protein is functionally active. Thus, the data indicate the localization of pro-urokinase precursors in neutrophils.

Tuberculosis and histiocytic lymphadenitis in Queensland (Australia). Histiocytic Lymphadenitis (HLA) and tuberculous lymphadenitis (TL) occur in calves and cattle, respectively, of Queensland (Australia). This study assessed whether these diseases are endemic within Queensland, their detection and incidence and the outcome of the infection in calves and cattle. Tuberculin tests were positive in 2.4% of calves and 23.5% of cattle. Indicators of recent Mycobacterium bovis infection (M. bovis-specific gamma interferon test and culture of necropsied animals) were 3.5% and 6.5% of calves and cattle, respectively, but overall M. bovis-specific gamma interferon test and culture were low in relation to cattle and calves in the study. Cattle in Queensland, including those that had M. bovis-specific gamma interferon test and culture, did not have HL or TL. Prolonged milk feeding of calves with milk that contained anti-Mycobacterium avium ssp. paratuberculosis antibodies reduced the risk of infection with M. bovis and M. avium ssp. parat
