Tacrolimus (Tacrodex; trade names Prograf, Advagraf, Travodex, Protopic) is a calcineurin inhibitor that prevents the production of IL-2 and other cytokines by T cells. Tacrolimus is effective in acute rejection prophylaxis, as part of a combination regimen with a CNI, in organ transplantation. It is also used to prevent allograft rejection in solid-organ transplantation for hematopoietic stem cell transplantation. Medical uses Tacrolimus is used to prevent rejection in kidney, heart, and lung transplantations. Tacrolimus works by reducing the number of T-cells and their function in the body. In kidney transplantation, it is used to prevent rejection when the recipient is already taking another immunosuppressant. If both drugs are taken, the drug tacrolimus does not have to be taken daily. It is commonly used in combination with mycophenolate mofetil (CellCept) in heart and lung transplantation and with cyclosporine and steroids in kidney transplantation. Cancellation of the calcineurin inhibitor tacrolimus may cause a loss of immunosuppression within a few days; as a result, practitioners should not withhold the medication until steroid and antimetabolite drug regimens have been withdrawn. It is more commonly withheld in people with elevated liver enzyme levels after transplantation to avoid a drug-induced liver injury. Side effects and toxicity The side effects of tacrolimus are dose-dependent: it is more commonly associated with nephrotoxicity, neurotoxicity, and
