I also remember the controversies, like the bad rating in XBLA. This game looked amazing and after playing it on my mobile phone for two years, it still looks stunning. I can't wait to re-play this on my PC again. There are a couple of issues that I could see when I was playing it, but nothing too bad. - The controls could be a little bit better, like the camera angle, when you jump. With the mobile phone, you could move the camera more freely, and also you could use the back touch screen to control the camera. - The dynamic/wind effect looks cool, but it's a little bit too loud for the action. -

A box pops out of nowhere and must be moved around the level. There are doors at the end of the room, that open. Each door can only be opened with the correct item from the room, and when there is only one item remaining the box disappears, until it is moved somewhere else. At that point it will pop back out again. The moment it appears it is time for the box to be moved, and now you must choose a way to do this, by switching to a specific character and move the box to the appropriate location, the box will show up again, you must now choose a new way to do this and the game continues. A clever player will find ways to take advantage of these items, and the situation on the screen, but the more moves it takes to win, the more it will tax your mind. Each character has their own set of moves, so finding them and understanding what they do is key to winning. If it is not moved, a timer will start to countdown, counting down to when the storage unit doors will be unlocked. The player is given a choice of what they want to do at that time. By finishing the task, they can get the doors unlocked, and get out of there, but with an increased chance of the guard waking up, or coming back, so not only is it a race to get out of the depot, but a race against the clock as well. The Game-play Puzzle Action and Action-Puzzle Game Combine!: A cat burglar, trying to make a quick get away, but running into a security guard, the player must find the correct moves to pass through security, trying to avoid the guard by hiding in the shadows, with the chance to move out when he does not see, while avoiding a gentle sleeping cat. Suddenly a guard comes running through, and the player must try and get away before he wakes up. There are a total of five stages in this mode, with two ending and three 'peas' in between. It is a chance to mix up the action and puzzle parts, so each time the player is given the chance to choose how they will deal with the situation. The challenge is, that the timer to the last lock is also counting down, and as you make your way out of the depot, you must deal with the situation, or run out of time, and be back in jail! Now, on top of the usual fun of stealing stuff from people's houses, there are also health issues and
