Q: Is it possible to duplicate a build of a .NET C# project in Visual Studio 2017 when upgrading an old solution that was built with VS 2010? I'm currently working on an old VS 2010 project that targets .NET Framework 4.0. I'm upgrading this project to .NET Framework 4.7. There are several assemblies in my solution that were built in VS 2010. They target .NET Framework 4.0 and I can't replace them. In other words, I'm asking if it's possible to "duplicate" a project in Visual Studio 2017 without having to go through the IDE and manually rebuild everything. A: In other words, I'm asking if it's possible to "duplicate" a project in Visual Studio 2017 without having to go through the IDE and manually rebuild everything. Yes, it is possible and highly recommended. As @mgibsonbr already stated, you can manually build everything using the following command line:

/p:Configuration=Release

/p:Platform=AnyCPU This will produce a set of assemblies in your bin\Release folder

(assuming your target framework is .NET Framework 4.7) which you can then replace with the new one. Note that you can also specify an additional output folder which will effectively build everything twice, once in the main target framework and again into your optional output folder.

Molly's Teen Years
Molly's Teen Years was a full-service bar and nightclub located inside The Williams Inn Hotel in Williamsburg, Brooklyn. Formerly the Drury Plaza Hotel, the iconic hotel has been a favorite of movie stars, rock stars and royalty since it opened in 1937. People who stay in the hotel can enjoy the handcrafted cocktails, gourmet menu and cozy fireplace lounge at Molly's Teen Years. Opened in 2008, the hotel offers something for everyone who wants to escape the stresses of the city. The trendy nightspot and bar occupies the famous Second Story Bar at the hotel. Molly's Teen Years received its liquor license in February 2008 and opened in May 2008, featuring high-end cocktails and a menu of upscale fare. It was known for its luxe ambience. The bar is located on the corner of Bedford Avenue and Drury Street in Williamsburg. External links

What's New In?

The present invention relates to a method and apparatus for monitoring a railway car for compliance with a predetermined set of rules regarding the structural integrity of railway cars. Specifically, the present invention pertains to a method and apparatus for determining whether railway cars, which require monitoring because of the likelihood that they may structurally fail, are operated in accordance with the rules for the railway car design. The method and apparatus of the present invention uses an electronic microprocessor to test whether a railway car complies with a plurality of rules such as a rule specifying the maximum curvature of a railway car supported by wheels and a rule specifying a maximum distance from the side of a railway car to a wall of the railway car. Typical railroads include a plurality of "blocks" formed from a plurality of railway cars and carriages. Each block is formed from a plurality of railway cars and carriages which are coupled to one another such that the cars and carriages in each block are coupled such that the cars and carriages are generally arranged in a side-by-side relationship. Each block has a lead car and a lead car may be the first car in a block or one of the last cars in a block. Each car in a block is coupled to a leading and trailing car in the following block. Each block is coupled to the next following block or the last block by coupling the cars in the block to cars which are coupled to the end of the last block. Cars in adjacent blocks are coupled to one another by coupling the ends of adjacent cars in the adjacent blocks. The majority of railway cars in use today are coupled in such a manner. Each railway car comprises a first end and a second end. The first end of a railway car, as indicated by the reference character 1 of FIG. 1, is the end of a railway car which faces toward the last car in the preceding block and the second end is the end which faces toward the first car in the following block. The two ends of a railway car are coupled to one another by a coupling mechanism which is mounted in the region of the two ends of the railway car. It is common practice for a railway car to be provided with a coupler mounted in the region of the two ends of the railway car which includes a coupling mechanism and which is designed to couple one of the two ends of the railway car to a coupler mounted in the end of a car in the following block or in the end of the last block. The coupler mounted at the ends of a railway car typically has
