Gene therapy for cancer. An attenuated replication-defective herpes simplex virus (HSV) is currently the most effective means of inserting a gene into cancer cells in vivo. We have demonstrated that such an HSV can be used to carry genes encoding a variety of biological or immunological effector molecules, including but not limited to cytokines (interleukin-2, interleukin-4, interleukin-6, interleukin-10, tumor necrosis factor-alpha, granulocyte/macrophage colony-stimulating factor, interferons-alpha and -gamma, platelet-derived endothelial cell growth factor, and nerve growth factor), molecules with immunosuppressive properties (caveolin, transforming growth factor-beta 1 and -beta 2, cyclosporin A, FK506, and TGF beta trap), and molecules with cytotoxic activity (tumor necrosis factor-related apoptosis-inducing ligand, herpes simplex virus-derived peptides, and ricin). We have thus constructed vectors that can simultaneously introduce two such effector molecules into a single cancer cell in vivo. There is substantial evidence that the antitumor effect of such gene-based immunotherapy can be augmented by the use of cytokines and other effector molecules. Moreover, by using cytokines, we have been able to achieve tumor regression while inducing no apparent immunosuppression, and this approach represents a powerful means of controlling tumor growth. A major advantage of this strategy is that cytokines and effector molecules can be locally produced, which may further increase their therapeutic efficacy.This invention relates generally to computer networking, and more specifically to a channelized communications channel structure that provides dynamic bandwidth allocation and utilization monitoring for an MPLS datapath. As the value and use of information continue to increase, individuals and businesses seek additional ways to process and store information. One option available to users is information handling systems. An information handling system generally processes, compiles, stores, and/or communicates information or data for business, personal, or other purposes, thereby allowing users to take advantage of the value of the information. Because technology and information handling needs and requirements vary between different users or applications, information handling systems may also vary regarding what information is handled, how the information is handled, how much information is processed, stored, or communicated, and how quickly and efficiently the information may be processed, stored, or communicated. The variations in information handling

Government Ends Discounting Fees on New Smart Watches The government has rescinded the price discount it has given to buyers of its smart watches, for at least the second time since the product was launched. On Friday, the Ministry of Finance announced the pricing will be reduced by 10 percent to NT$400 (US$13.1) from the original NT$450 (US$14.4) for the Apple Watch Sport model, and from NT$400 to NT$450 for the Apple Watch, after a public complaint by Apple Watch users. The ministry said the price is "an excessive discount" and violates a government decision last year in which it said retail prices should remain at the same level they were during the first product launch. The original asking price for the Apple Watch was NT$2,500 (US$76.6). It currently sells for approximately NT$10,000 in mainland China. It is unclear when the price reduction was first announced. Previously, the ministry had lowered the prices of most other smart watches, including devices from Samsung and Motorola.Funny (that was a mix of "OH I love you" & "I hate you" & also "I miss my friend") "You gave me lots of bling, AND have no shame in selling me out… You are way too dangerous for me, maybe for this world…" Told the geologist I work for about his latest find.
