Conversion to the infrared light can be carried out in a similar manner to the UV-light in.NCCP-Hep-5: a novel human platelet alloantigen system defined by a polymorphism in the platelet glycoprotein IIIa gene. As part of our continuing studies of platelet alloantigens, we have identified a new platelet antigen system based on a polymorphism in the platelet glycoprotein IIIa gene. By use of a polymerase chain reaction (PCR)-restriction fragment length polymorphism assay in combination with allele-specific hybridization, we found that 9 of 154 white, white-Hispanic, white-black, and Asiatic subjects were homozygous for a specific polymorphism in the platelet glycoprotein IIIa gene. This polymorphism, tentatively named NCCP-Hep-5 (National Marrow Donor Program-Human Platelet Antigens 5), was seen in homozygous form only when the DNA was amplified with the 3' primer and digested with the HpaI enzyme. This polymorphism was not found in patients with thrombocytopenia, Fanconi's
