The book is not a manual but rather the thoughts of a web designer, Rich Pierson, who presents the belief that a web design "is the spiritual soul of any business." Chapter summaries Web Design Is An Art - The online world is not a dirty, bureaucratic place. Designers are not inferior artists. The Web Is Different - There is nothing different about the web. Its philosophies are less well defined. Marketing Can Be Effective Through the Web - The web site is an excellent place to sell your products and services. You Don't Have to Market Your Business - Marketing is done by the people that follow you online. You Don't Need Advertising Dollars - Online marketing is much cheaper. You Don't Need a Website - Some websites are not useful to business. You Don't Need a Designer - Designers are too critical. The Dream Is Dead - The internet will not save us. For example I have a list: ["hi", "there"]; ["how", "are", "you", "?"] ... I want to find where there is a duplicate string (e.g. in the above example we have two 'there' strings). A: The problem is that you are not properly setting the value of the cell to nil (or rather 0) before setting its accessory type. That is, the value of the isLeaf property of the UITableViewCell instance shouldn't be 0 but should be nil (or the result of an expression that evaluates to 0): let cell = tableView.dequeueReusableCellWithIdentifier("tableCellIdentifier", forIndexPath: indexPath) as! GroupTableViewCell cell.isLeaf = true cell.accessoryType =.disclosureIndicator cell.valueLabel?.text = "" After this, the cell.isLeaf property should evaluate to true. If it doesn't, then something else is going on. By the way, if you are going to use the isLeaf property, then you might want to consider checking that value after you dequeue a cell. Something like this: let cell = tableView.dequeueReusableCellWithIdentifier("tableCellIdentifier", forIndexPath: indexPath) as! GroupTableViewCell if cell.isLeaf == true { cell.accessoryType =.disclosureIndicator } else { cell.accessoryType =.none } cell.valueLabel?.text = "" Classical-chain alkyne-functionalized ferrocenyl acetate MOFs: chemistry, structure, and material performances. The structure and gas sorption behavior of a series of single-crystalline alkyne-functionalized Fe(II) MOFs with 1,3-dihydroxyisobenzofuran-5-carboxylic acid as the ligand were investigated. The synthesis of these MOFs follows the same pathway reported for their analogues made from 1,2-dihydroxyisobenzofuran, with the only difference being the preformed lactone as the solvent (propylene glycol), instead of the solvent and the reactant (toluene). The single-crystal X-ray diffraction analyses show that the MOFs possess a 3D framework with (4,4) topology. The alkyne-functionalized MOFs showed significantly improved gas-sorption properties for H2 and CO2 gases (37.7 and 15.5 cm3·g-1 at 273 K for
