

The new “HyperMotion Technology” was used to not only create more realistic touches, but also to improve the game’s weighting and balance, to create a more exciting and authentic experience. “The last version of FIFA included dedicated weighting for motion capture data, but it wasn’t as good a fit for the most important parts of the game,” FIFA 22 Lead Gameplay Designer Emiliano Sala said. “Our hypermotion tech fills that gap. This is really about bringing to life the intricacies of real football. We now have a movement engine that is finely-tuned to the football game experience. And we have two years of game data to work with, which has allowed us to create the most accurate player weighting. “It’s a key part of the game, and it brings a new level of weighting and responsiveness to the game. With this data, we could monitor and think about the player’s weight when they’re on the ball or when they’re off the ball, at rest or running. And it’s awesome to see how much better FIFA feels as a result of this new engine.” Weighing in on this performance impact, Sala added: “We’re seeing more and more that when FIFA 22 is in motion, the game feels more responsive and fluid than FIFA 21. While we had known that our technology was good, we are seeing it in action here, and you can really feel the difference when you’re trying to control your ball, create a pass or take a shot.” FIFA 22 also features the most accurate passing animations since FIFA 19. This was achieved using a new technique called “passing animation parameters” which allowed us to create a more flexible animation that can handle any type of pass and any motion. All in-game passing animations are now controlled by an animation engine, which is able to react accurately to the ball, the player and everything around it. This means that the ball can be picked up more quickly, the player can pick up balls high up the pitch while sprinting, and the player can create more interesting passes while moving towards the goal. FIFA 22 introduces a new modified tackling system, which includes a smarter defender AI. In the previous game, when the player

For me is a great football experience and I can't recommend FIFA enough for players and non-players alike. Addictive Football is meant to be played fun, so when a game can make that fun addictive, you know you have done something great. FIFA for me is addictive, the fact I can enjoy this game with my friends and family, it makes it more enjoyable and a nice change to the TV. I also like the fact that the game allows you to play as many different teams as you like without having to buy them all. Mystery The game is such a unique experience for me, and it makes me want to keep playing. I love the fact I can customise and change the way I play the game to match my own playing style.
