About Kaidens Record of Lodoss War □The world of Kaidan has been divided into several scattered islands since ancient times. There are also those known as the "unknown dead," a group that was forced to leave their own island due to a calamity. Due to a forgotten war, they departed, and the blue-skinned Shinshine Elves and the gold-skinned Lapis Elves did not make their paths cross again until now. □The Twelve Kingdoms are cut off from the rest of the world. The noblemen fear the islanders living abroad, but the heroes of the Twelve Kingdoms are known to be strong warriors and conquerors. □The island on the east of Kaidan is rumored to be a certain place. People call it "High Carrera," but there is no record of its location in the past. It seems that during the war, a blue-skinned Shinshine Elf caused something terrible there. Game Introduction □Players will be able to choose from a mixture of heroes and archers. □The battle system allows the player to freely switch between attacks while attacks are fully-charged, and it also allows attacks to be chained. □In addition to battle, there is a system in the game that can learn and improve the special skills of your own party members. ABOUT Kaidan Meshi □The Fantasy Action RPG where players acquire new and thrilling skills. □It was co-developed with the man behind the classic fantasy adventure game Nier. As a successor game, Kaidan is co-developed with the same staff that developed Nier, with Yoshifumi Hashimoto, and Satoshi Takano serving as producers. ABOUT UNFORSUNG □Players will be able to obtain it as an update to Kaidan. □This game will be released around September 2017. Game Introduction □Players will be able to obtain Unforbidden as the free update after playing Kaidan. □While Kaidan is a Fantasy Action RPG, Unforbidden has been developed with emphasis on the RPG genre. About the Art □Taking Inspiration from the Art of Miyazaki's 1990-91 NieR: Automata □Styles include original designs, character designs from classic anime titles, and concepts from other titles, as well as a completely

Elmer H. Craver (November 11, 1914 - August 20, 1992) was an American statistician best known for his work in sample surveys, consumer behavior, and analysis of longitudinal data.

Biography Born in Grand Rapids, Michigan on November 11, 1914, Craver earned a B.A. degree from Purdue University in 1936, and his M.S. degree in 1938, also from Purdue. While a Ph.D. student at Purdue, he worked with Karl W. Rostron, a statistician at the Bureau of Labor Statistics, as part of an early cooperation between the agency and education, later leading to a position at Purdue in 1939. As a student and assistant statistician, he worked under Rostron on processing employer-sponsored wage and hours surveys and on various aspects of income and demographic studies, including the Yerkes-Perry Survey and the Survey of Income and Program Participation. In 1948, he won a grant from the National Science Foundation to develop the Inter-University Research Statistical System, which later became SRCRSA (Society for Research of Computer Recreations in the Social Sciences). Craver joined the Federal Bureau of Investigation as a statistician in 1950, and established the Bureau's first Bureau of Laboratory Analysis, which grew into the National Criminal Intelligence Service in 1957. Later, he worked on national mail surveys, research on sale and use of prescription drugs, statics of real estate, and demographic studies.

After his retirement from the bureau in 1971, Craver went to work for the University of Chicago as a professor of sociology, retirement calculations, and academic research. There he conducted research on the U.S. elderly, the Indian health care system, and female labor force participation. He won the Beeson Award in 1987. The George J. Stigler Award in Surveying is named after him.
