

“We heard what the fans were saying and wanted to give FIFA an authentic and realistic-feeling experience,” said Sam Rivera, Technical Director, FIFA. “To achieve this, we needed to simulate all the movements of the players using advanced physics, while capturing the subtleties of real-life football and applying it into the game.” FIFA developers had to look for high-fidelity data sets from actual match moments. That provided the most realistic feeling. From match actions and adrenaline-filled moments like a header or tackle, to new-found speed and fluidity through the field, FIFA 22 is the most authentic soccer simulation on the market. “We didn’t want to just take data and make a game with it. We want to take data and make something that is more fun,” says Rivera. FIFA data from a match is used for a variety of things including player animations, on-ball controls, goal celebrations, dribbling, fouls, tackling, ball pressure, and ball-to-player interactions. FIFA 22 is powered by a new game engine (FIFA Engine), which includes top-of-the-line physics, vision-based player intelligence, and a unique player awareness system that allows for true, 360° ball control. With this engine, major improvements were made in the player controls as well as the ball. FIFA 22 is also the first FIFA title to use the “RealBall™” physics model. This physics system provides for more realistic ball controls, movement, and flight. “Collectively, we have been working on this for a long time and our goal was to push the boundaries of what is possible in a simulation game for soccer,” adds Rivera. “In a realistic situation where the players are actually running around, acting and reacting the way they would, we have the ability to find and exploit any dynamics that might exist.” Unrivaled Player Intelligence As players chase down opponents, making and receiving passes, or attempting to dribble past a defender, FIFA 22’s player intelligence is incredibly accurate. Players are aware of the positions of teammates and opponents, which allows for realistic communication and interaction on the field. With FIFA 22’s new system, players can track where teammates and opponents are at all times. This includes all data on passes, locations

What's new in Fifa 22:

- The controls are now more responsive and natural to the way you actually play. Controls are now based on attacking rather than defending, so passing/attack controls are geared towards live speed and have been moved back for defensive-minded players
- Revamped restart system that allows you to jump off the ball and take your shot from a new angle, creating more dynamic shooting options for strikers.
- A new system for using the Sprint/Air Pass in defense. Jump out of the tackle or Block and throw the ball into the air, where your teammates can intercept to create another attacking opportunity
- The “Ignite” system gives players that missed an attempt a critical shot at breaking down resistance and free-kicks to shoot into an empty net
