CATIA V5R17.Andrew Butterfield, the 49-year-old father of a Brighton, England, teenager killed by a police officer, expressed his opposition to the officer's actions during an interview on Channel 4 News on Monday. Butterfield's 15-year-old son, Kyle, was shot to death at a shopping center while attempting to burglarize a car. The officer involved, Sgt. Deshaun Hollingsworth, said that when Butterfield tried to get in his car at gunpoint, the police officer shot him. The United Kingdom's Independent Police Complaints Commission (IPCC) is conducting an investigation into the shooting, but Butterfield, speaking with journalist Krishnan Guru-Murthy on Monday, was quick to express his feelings about the officer involved in the shooting. "Why?" he asked Guru-Murthy when he was asked what he thought of the police officer who pulled the trigger. "I'm just so baffled. I mean, I can only assume he thought my son was going to put the gun to his head. I'm just so shocked to think an officer of any description would put themselves in danger and his actions—I'm just floored really. I'm trying to understand the rationale behind that, to be honest." "I just don't think it's justified. It was very unnecessary, and they'll find out in court. If [the police officer] thinks that he is in danger, he will be in danger. My son will be in danger, and he will have shot him, as he tells them, without provocation," Butterfield added. 0cc13bf012
