Mr. Justice Roberts then did not appear to be considering a case where the owner had not set fire to it. There was no reason whatever for saying that a person might be guilty of arson and yet liable for punitive damages if he had set fire to the property of another. Instead, the statement by the Court is most reasonably interpreted to mean that the owner was not liable for punitive damages because that offense was not committed in the course of the arson. In the opinion of Justice Traynor in a case in which the court held the damages recoverable were punitive damages, the court said: "The doctrine of that case is that a person guilty of arson, a malicious interference with property rights, may be liable to damages in the form of punitive damages for injuring property not belonging to him." (Emphasis added.) (Italics in original.) (Traynor, California Crimes (Cont.Ed.Bar 1970) § 25.8, p. 278.) *412 Although appellant's counsel have cited several decisions in which it is said that in arson there are three ingredients (Randall v. A. M. Lockhart Constr. Co. (1954) 143 Cal. App.2d 198, 208-209 [299 P.2d 90]; Ambrose v. Drews (1905) 1 Cal. App. 405, 410-411 [82 P. 616]; cf., People v. Winston (1896) 111 Cal. 421, 425 [44 P. 1074]) the better conclusion seems to be that there are at least two ingredients, the burning of the property and the malice of the burning. It is true that malice in the law of criminal offenses may mean "a wish to vex, annoy or injure another person or an intent to do a wrongful act." (Pen. Code, § 7.) It is also true that the burning of property may be done with the intent to vex, annoy or injure a person (People v. Tippett (1962) 209 Cal. App.2d 8
