Superbus - Happy Busday (The Best Of) (2010)

Best Of Superbus 2010. . . . . As stated in the introduction, all the issues that we may have, there is nothing wrong with them, just accept them, and move on. In the advice I give my students, if they see any sign of emotional problems, they should inform me, and I will try to understand and treat the problem in the best possible way. I also prescribe them the appropriate medication. The reason I think that we all think in this way is because of natural selection. We are all here to replicate, so let the weak one die, in a physical sense. I hope that I have managed to shed some light on the subject, and to give some advice on how to deal with issues. A: And in your abstract you state that, "...research has shown a strong relationship between intelligence and mental illness, and that people with mental illness are three times more likely to commit suicide." So, to state your next assertion: It is time to stop condemning people with mental illness, and realize that not all mental illnesses are pathological, and not all people with mental illness are a threat to society. ....but we have already realized that mental illness isn't pathological, and all we're trying to do here is to reduce the bad effects of stereotypes on society. On the other hand, are you saying that condemning people with mental illness implies that they are a threat to society? If so, I believe your theory is somewhat flawed, and it has been observed that people with mental illness are more than three times more likely to commit suicide than those without mental illness. Regardless, I'm pretty sure that the two assertions contradict each other. And, on a personal level, I do not appreciate being told that I'm "condemning people with mental illness", as it implies that people with mental illness are less intelligent than us, and less worthy of compassion. Regarding the finding that people with mental illness are more likely to commit suicide: Is there really a correlation between intelligence, mental illness, and 6d1f23a050
