Hydraulic cylinders are designed to operate up to 38. 2. qr sign. k. In this exclusive Q&A, Barry Diller discusses the new division of USA Networks, why he has no plans to launch another television network, and why the end of Viacom would be a bad idea. The print version of Variety magazine has a new cover story on Gail Berman, who is now the new president of USA Networks. We've already told you some of the details of her new job, including that she will be able to move fast to capitalize on the momentum of Paramount Television's success with USA's Suits, as well as making some personal changes at the company she's been with her entire career. Now Variety has given us a few more interesting tidbits about her. First, here's what Variety says about her new division: "The TV division of USA Networks has been restructured by new President Berman to unify business units and market strategies, creating a more streamlined and cohesive TV channel. Berman will report directly to USA Chief Operating Officer Jonathan Karmell while being responsible for all USA Networks linear channels." It's no surprise that she will be unifying the TV division at USA. What's not at all clear from the Variety article is why she's taking this job if she's no longer working at Paramount. Maybe she's being rewarded for her success with the studio (the studio was bought by Diller's IAC yesterday, but is still run by Viacom's CEO). The more interesting question is why Diller is also getting involved with USA — even if it's mostly just to make sure she gets the job that she wants. Variety's Daniel Janning tells us that he doesn't understand why Berman is being brought into the fold: "What sort of TV experience does Gail bring that Diller doesn't?" Janning certainly doesn't think it's about being a good salesperson, either. "I'm certainly no television fan," he says. "But this seems somewhat like a David Voorhees moment: We have a guy who said he wants a special relationship with a woman, and we bring her in to work with the men." Would Berman and USA Network be a good marriage? That remains to be seen. Viacom's board has been trying to push Diller and his control over the company out. As Lachlan Murdoch put it, we're looking at "your father trying to get 6d1f23a050
