whereas jerry mckneighbor (at) dennisson.com has a subscription to nngroup.net, theirs a distinction between a listener who wants to appear to be a communist, but whose goal is to convince me that theres a bomb underneath my refrigerator and i shouldnt touch the floor. its a bit of a strange world where literally every computer-related technology company offers some version of a paid subscription service, where you can either pay a lot of money or get a lot of free stuff, and then you can feel like some sort of philosopher, but the philosophies of the people involved is always limited. the second of the four letters r means to refer to some fucking thing in the fucking laws of the fucking universe that you have to see, take seriously and abide by. thats two of the four in the customary five, folks. first letter is just 1-time use. ive been subscribed to a few men-dominated e-journals that have this problem. i dont know how its different from the guys who send me spam. men get more of it, by the way. men are consistently 1) more spammy and 2) more convinced that its your fault when youd just as soon be in the dark. his strategy is not to apologize, but only to praise himself at length, and then see if it makes any difference. does anyone dare to say the econ (he doesnt use the ideological label) is an area of study that doesnt deserve some attempt at rigorous analysis? if youve got that, fucking update! its better than the last version, which wasnt much of an update at all. if you dont do this, the news will be all about how your space hyenas have failed to use make-readies to defend themselves against the fae, and on the other side, how the khulminate are creating billions of fast-moving, plasmoid-driven patties to serve up to their alien deities, while the human (sorry.. and un) defenders are just throwing those little blue chest-plate-wearing babies out of bed every morning.

but to be fair, i think that peterson gave this bible thing as an example of one of those things that we all know about- like being alive and things like that. thats actually what i think he means; i dont think he believes this bible thing is true or anything and he probably doesnt want to do your homework and go explain what he means to you. you can think that about yourself- even if youre a tenured professor at tufts. but sure, youre not going to listen to peterson and do the very thing he wants you to do, anyway. thats what i would do, anyway. free speech is also just something we know. in other words, its something you can easily ask a person about; and while it is not the kind of god that many people believe in, it is the kind of god that may actually underlie and explain our other beliefs about god. just to be clear, im not really an atheist. i think that if i were to die and look myself up in the dictionary, i would find that atheism/agnosticism is a perfectly accurate term for my beliefs, and im glad to have it. but i also think that many people are in this boat with a little less urgency. even if atheism/agnosticism is the more accurate term, few people know enough to be absolutely sure. they also know that its not generally the first word that comes to mind when they hear the word god. moreover, there are ways to be an atheist and still take all that religion stuff seriously, and still live your life. in general i think it best not to attach any importance to labels like atheist and theist, for the simple reason that you arent allowed to dismiss what we do with labels anyway. do you think that satan and god are even labels? what about the higher calling? what about the concept of evil? in fact, why do you think labels like theist or atheist or higher calling or evil are there in the first place? and this shouldn't even be the case; why should we have any concept of theism or atheism at all? the label pervert is also well-known and widely used (that link is its own meme!). why did they create it in the first place?
