while the game does not really need to be updated because the genre is old and not updated anymore. the game still seems to be a bit broken, especially when it comes to the career mode. it should be really easy to create a fantasy team for a new player, but in reality it is impossible. you cant seem to select players in the team and then drag them to positions. the process is just not fun, and theres no team specific trainer. other than that, the game is fun and a must buy. my guess is that the contracts of all the tour players, including phil, allow for their name to be used in advertising, either on tv or in print. i think that the players could sell their image to pepsi, whether its their name or likeness, for a few million dollars. i doubt that a player would refuse to take that amount of money because its not like a fat contract that would be paid out over a long time. that is why i doubt any player would be afraid of taking a pay cut to appear in an ad. and he wouldnt care if it wasnt pga related. so, i think the amount of money that could be made by selling advertising would be more than enough to satisfy phil. so, he isnt worried about any legal action by the pga tour. he just does not want to accept any money that isnt going to the players. he does not want to be an instrument of change. so, i agree with the fans that they should be allowed to boo if they want. i think that the tour would win more fans if they kept the booing. it certainly will keep the attention on the game. the booing is not really loud enough to be distracting. its also not really enough to get any player pissed off. but if one of the players gets booed, thats attention that will force him to step up his game. so, i dont think that booing is a bad thing. if the players are so scared of booing that they will not do anything, i think thats an embarrassment to them. i think that the players deserve to be booed because they are the ones who have a big mouth, not the fans.

The US lobbied heavily to retain the authorisation that it has to exert control over the internet within the US. What does that mean? It means that there should not be a foreign content board that can act outside the scope of the US laws. What it means is that the internet is a global ecosystem. Not like a country. So what is going on in Australia? If we look at the amount of online content created in Australia, its like 0.2% of all content on the internet. And we have the same amount of internet users than the US who are only like 1.5% of the world population. And if that wasnt enough, we are like 1% of the worlds GDP. Even if we had the same amount of content, its like only 1/50 of the websites in the United States. Australian law does not protect Australian law.

Its like a criminal in a free country here. We are not in the UK or Europe or anywhere. wed begat the pga, and the pga begat mickelson. theres a reason he has a statue in the main at bellerive. why they would let tiger go is a mystery. tiger is from alabama, and i have friends that live in alabama, and i have heard tiger is a prick. it takes all kinds. if youre going to be on the pga, you have to be nice. thats what i love about the pga. when you walk into a pga event, you know you are going to be around the best players in the world. guys like sams, mickelson, miller, course..

there are so many different guys that are down here that they get on the tee box that they want to hit and they hit a bomb, and they dont even think about hitting it. they just hit it, just because they're so excited to be here. its pretty cool. 5ec8ef588b
