have no idea how to reccomend where you can learn of a solution. i've tried to reisntall it and when i restart all of my programs, i get that magix has been replaced by magix-x64.. >i have disabled all of my software and their is no overlap between any of it.i've removed all of the programs but magix-x64 and it still gets in there. i think that's what was causing it to crash. i have uninstall it again and reran the install and that thing is not replacing the directory? like you, i get the same magix-x64 error message. i also disable the other programs to see if there is an overlap but none of them make any attempt to update the magix directory. i have deleted and reinstalled magix-x64 without any luck. according to cnet, this software has been known to cause problems in some versions of windows vista, including certain service pack versions. if you're having issues with vista, make sure you have service pack 1 installed. another possible problem is if you have one or more hard drives in your computer. it is possible that the magix software could erroneously believe that you have more than one hard drive and try to install on a drive that it shouldn't be installed on. make sure that all of your hard drives are plugged in, and only one hard drive is connected to the system at a time.
