The modern Formula One supercars are currently powered by a V6 turbocharged engine. If Aston Martin was to build a modern Formula One supercar, it would be powered by a V8 twin turbo, which is the engine currently powering Aston Martin's own race cars. Aston Martin has long since abandoned the project, but to this day, the project is still referred to as Project K.21. All of Aston Martin's race cars are state-of-the-art and well-engineered. Powered by a twin-turbo 5.3-liter V12 engine with variable valve timing, the Spirit of Britain was the most technologically advanced supercar in the world. With an advanced design, lightweight construction, and state-of-the-art design, the Spirit of Britain was a dream car. Despite its features and beautiful design, the Spirit of Britain was never produced.
