Firefox'a. Depression of multifractal characteristics in transmembrane voltage fluctuations of cortical neurons in a rat model of depression. In rats models of depression, it has been demonstrated that rats exposed to chronic mild stress (CMS) show anxiety- and depression-like behavior. To examine the correlation between depression-like behavior and membrane voltage fluctuation (MVF) characteristics, we investigated temporal changes in the correlation dimension of the MVF of excitatory postsynaptic potential (EPSP), and the correlation dimension and the nonlinearity of a transmembrane voltage of pyramidal cells (VC) of the hippocampal CA3 in a rat model of depression. The correlation dimension and the nonlinearity of the EPSP were significantly decreased, whereas these indices for the VC were significantly increased, compared to control (CON) rats. These results suggest that depression-like behavior is associated with the depression of multifractal characteristics in the MVF of neurons. Q: How to inject a different connection string into an Entity Framework entity? Is it possible to inject a new connection string at runtime? I'm getting my connection string from a config file and I want to use the environment variables. A: You can't change the connection string at runtime, but you can compile a connection string to a property on the object. Assuming the string is a string property named `ConnectionString` you can make it read only:

public class MyObject { public string ConnectionString { get { return _connectionString; } set { _connectionString = value; } } protected _connectionString = "my-connection-string"; }
