The one feature I've missed from Lightroom 4 was the ability to view and view a RAW photo while adjusting an exposure. I had my D800+ backup camera on full auto, and I would come home with hundreds of images. As a result, I would often download these onto a PC and pull out the one I wanted to view. Or I would upload the image from my iPhone or iPad to my computer. I'd open up Lightroom and it would give me a histogram and show me the RAW output for just a moment. Pricing and features of services are top of minds for Adobe users, so I thought I'd look at the subscription services for Adobe Creative Cloud and how they may be affecting our workflows. While I did look into this years ago and discuss it with CS6, it's never really been a major player for me. The release of the newest version of Lightroom always grinds to a halt. Adobe Photoshop CC pricing was announced a few weeks ago and I'm very pleased. With Photoshop CC, I can get Photoshop, Lightroom and the complete line of CS4 and CS5 plug-ins all for $19/month. With Lightroom and the CS4 and CS5 plug-ins priced at $49.99/month, it's a good deal. Previously, Lightroom had its own standalone subscription which, for those who had past issues, had very high pricing, especially for the CS5 version. The standalone subscription price for part of the CS4 and CS5 catalogs was $29.99. As the title implies, this is a mid-level test. Not all those on this short list were created equal, so definite conclusions regarding performance and raw speed cannot be drawn from this test. For example, all conversions were done on a mid-range base model PC. Many of those test edits were done through Bridge. I had to work with Lightroom 5 and Bridge as separate apps, with 7 of the 10 images being backed up to a Mac. In the final circle/rapid comparison, I had to work with both apps on the Mac while making adjustments in both apps at once.

After the release of Photoshop CS2, Adobe introduced the predictive-fill feature — meaning it creates smooth seamless layers. It's a unique improvement to the blending feature that almost lets you completely eliminate the need to use a mask. For more information about predictive fill, check out the CS4: In Depth Tutorial . Adobe's automatic adjustment layers are a feature that makes it completely unnecessary for users to create mask layers. Switch to Photo, set the levels to Custom, and the Photoshop engine will create a mask layer for you. "Our goal at Adobe is to transform the way that people create and share ideas through the power of technology," said Shantanu Narayen, CEO of Adobe. In addition to introducing Photofusion, we're also excited to announce that we are introducing a significantly lighter feature set and more predictable performance for Photoshop and Lightroom. These updates, in their first release, are available to users of both Photoshop and Lightroom on Creative Cloud memberships and in upcoming updates for non-CC members. We've all been hearing for a while that we were trying to take the best of Photoshop and lean into other areas of Adobe's offering, and we believe that this is one of those areas where we're very happy to be able to deliver a change in our user's experience. We've heard this feedback loud and clear that people really like the idea of being able to choose which apps they use for specific projects. And so we're excited about the opportunity we have to make Photoshop even lighter. The following Photoshop tools and features are awesome and just what you need for editing and designing your projects that can represent the best quality of your work. With their improvements, Photoshop is very face-meltingly a smart way that designer find old tasks easier to perform. Adjustment layers are a key tool in Photoshop, giving basic color correction much needed to make portraits and other photos look their best. When we are working on images, we find that no matter what kind of changes we make in an image, we need to use the magic brush and change gradient stops that have multiple colors and adjust the numbers between each color code that will make the final image looks much better.
