One of the most common false impressions is that the only thing we vote about is the very hot and very cold weather, with seemingly no middle ground. This is the myth that Senator Jon Tester, D-Mont., and the Montana dairy lobby, have been pushing to subvert. The old false premise is that American business supports the political party in power, and opposes those in opposition. But this new myth of American political customs is that we vote "only" about the weather. Sen. Tester, along with industry and legislators from across the continent, have been trying to roll back the progress made by the 2015 agreement between dairy farmers and the dairy industry in order to support dairy and other agriculture. That agreement gave dairy farmers the ability to label their milk with state of origin information. It also allowed them to define supply management. That's right, the federal government ceded its authority to the states, which in turn, determine the milk-labeling system. But Tester and the dairy lobby wouldn't have it, and they asked Congress to override the U.S. Department of Agriculture and demand that the rules be overturned. And the dirty little secret is that a very sizeable minority of Americans support this roll-back. They aren't looking out for the little guy, they are looking out for a very few corporations. It isn
