Beowulf-The Hoard poem, The singer and the critics, History of Civilization essay. The Story of Civilization is written by the prominent 19th century author and philosopher Cem Joad. In Cem Joad's The Story of Civilization, he had written, "Civilization and history are necessarily in opposition to one another. "... the best thing which could be said for it was, that it could not and was not going to make any further progress... of the evils of the day, perhaps to the evils of the age." Our civilization today exhibits qualities which we think of as unique. It is also very poor at anything else. It has no depth, either in its values or in its language. CEM Joad said that "The idea of the equality of man is an idea which has destroyed the opportunity of humanity to rise to the fullness of its potential. Civilization is a noun and civilization is a process of construction and destruction.. Our civilization is not an achievement of the people. In his essay The Civilization of To-day, Joad argued that the civilization of the 19th century could not stand up to the needs of the 20th century. "Today men want a civilization which will meet the needs of all the people. The civilization of the civilized people will be built up on a certain basis. CEM Joad said that "The idea of the equality of man is an idea which has destroyed the opportunity of humanity to rise to the fullness of its potential.
