"The best way to develop a business in the resource sector is to be competitive in the market place," said CEO Keith Matthews. "To do that, we need competitive laws and that is what this review will provide." The review will consider the need for re-registration, changes to royalty rates, the right of first refusal, mining tax and other matters. Mr Matthews said the move would mean positive things for the Central and South Coast. "The CSIRO and CSG report that we are already the strongest mineral supplier in the country. "This review is long overdue and will deliver positive results for our people and the economy." Mr Matthews said the review would be an historic opportunity for the State Government to strengthen the best business climate in the nation. "I encourage the Government to give the review its due consideration and do this for the benefit of the Central and South Coast." The board has received 17 responses to public submissions on the review, with most in support of the review. The move was welcomed by the regional Industry Association, which said the review would help the region capitalise on the opportunities presented by increased mining activity. "The existing mining industry is unique within Australia," said chief executive of the Mining Association of New South Wales, Stuart Carnegie. "To be successful long-term, Australia needs to ensure mining supports the economy and creates opportunities for the many other industries that rely on mining. "The demand for minerals is only growing and the minerals industry is playing a key role in the long term health of our state." The Government has made it clear that it wants to see a review of mining law, and the Board has been working on the proposal for some months. A joint taskforce has been established
